Manhunt Launched as Arrest Warrant Hangs Over Amba Activist Ambi Titus

By Mercy Biang Kum

41-year-old denizen of Bamenda, Ambi Titus Mbuta, is at the centre of a nationwide manhunt after a warrant of arrest was reportedly issued against him in June 2018 by the State Counsel of Mezam, Peter

Essongbi Mbuagabaw. The warrant alleges that Titus is a fugitive from justice, accused of serious offences against the State of Cameroon linked to his involvement in separatist activities in the North West Region. According to judicial sources, the State Counsel's office charged him with bribery, rebellion, and undermining national unity, offences that carry some of the most severe penalties under Cameroonian law.

NW Governor Lifts Curfew

By Kowac K. K. Bandolo

The Governor of the North West region of Cameroon, Adolphe Lele Lafrique has lifted security restrictions placed on the movement of persons and properties within the region for over one year today.

The information is contained in a release issued this Friday June 14, 2018 by Governor Lele Lafrique.

The release partly reads that "the security restrictions placed on the movement of persons and properties within the North West region are from the date of signature of the present order lifted."

In the order, the governor charges Administrative authorities and heads of security and defence forces with the implementation of the order.

Owing to the long-lasting unrest in Cameroon's North West and South West regions, the government had ordered a curfew in 2018 in a bid to contain secessionist activities. The government had thus restricted the movement of persons and goods from 6pm to 6am the next morning except on special authorisation, Administrative authorities and defence forces.

The curfew was renewed after and after till it was lifted by Governor Lele Lafrique.

Female Detainees Schooled On Petty Trading

By Boris K. Batata

Female inmates at the Buca Central prison are now fully equipped on how to make money with the limited means they have. This followed a one-day capacity building workshop for female inmates organised by the Justice and Equity Prison Fellowship Cameroon.

The workshop gave opportunities for the inmates to learn how to make body lotions, hair gels, detergents and many others.

In an opening remark, the CEO of Justice and Equity Prison Fellowship Cameroon, Madam Kwamu Nana nee Abunaw Marie, insisted that the workshop was not an end itself but a beginning to an end. Reason being that, her organisation made available materials with some financial assistance for participants to start up. Also follow-ups will be made to ensure success of their activities. She pointed out that the gesture falls in line with the organisation's objective which is to reform and rehabilitate inmates and empower them for life after prison.

In an appreciative manner, the Administrative General of the Prison, Anold Ngomba heartily thanked the Justice and Equity Prison Fellowship Cameroon organisation for the initiative. He appended that visit showed that there is love for the female detainees.

Worthy of note is the fact that the Buca Central prison has 23 female inmates and of that number, 10 are convicts while 12 still await trial.

SDF Chairman Threatens To Evacuate Patients At Kumba Hospital to Bamenda For Proper Treatment

By Peter Kum

The chairman of the Social Democratic Front-SDF threatens to evacuate patients at Kumba District hospital to Bamenda for proper medical attention.

In a visit to the hospital Thursday, June 13th, Ni John Fru Ndi regrets that government has done nothing concretely to rehabilitate and reequip the hospital four months after it was razed down by flames.

Before visiting the hospital, the leader of the SDF has questioned the SDO of Meme division Chamberlain Tuo'ou Ndong on military excesses in the Division. On why armed men succeeded to burn the John Fru Ndi that the perpetrators took the military unawares.

Earlier in Limbe, the divisional officer of Limbe II has humiliated the leader of the main opposition party by denying him access to SONARA. The administrator said he was working on instructions from Yaounde.

Refusing to wrestle with the DO, Ni John Fru Ndi concluded that by denying him access to see the burnt section of the oil refinery, the government was trying to hide a dubious incident in connection to the fire incident.

SDF Challenges Gov't To Publish Sonara fire incident Findings

The Social Democratic Front has challenged the government of Cameroon to make public the results of the commission set up to investigate the Sonara fire incident.

ment, the Social Democratic Front said the results of the commission must be made public to Cameroonians in the shortest time possible.

"(The SDF) urges that the report of the commission set to investigate the Sonara incident be made public in the shortest time possible as this government is fond of setting commissions of inquiry without results," the SDF said in one of the resolu-

Following this request from the SDF, the party's Chairman Ni John Fru Ndi embarked on a visit to Sonaara to see the damage caused by the fire by was blocked by administrative authorities from accessing the area.

Authorities allege that Titus bribed prison officials at the Bamenda central prison and court detention facilities, an act that allegedly facilitated his escape from lawful custody. The warrant states that his actions go beyond mere evasion; they constitute an effort to undermine state authority and legal order. The prosecution further accuses Titus of promoting divisive sentiments that threaten the constitutional principle of the unity and indivisibility of the Republic of Cameroon, as outlined in the national constitution. These charges position him not only as a fugitive but as a person who fomented dissent against the state itself.

Security officials report that Titus fled Cameroon shortly after the warrant was issued, choosing an unknown destination that has yet to be confirmed. His flight is described by prosecutors as an aggravating factor that reinforces the allegations against him, suggesting a deliberate refusal to face legal proceedings. The government's statement on the matter characterises his departure from the country as evidence of guilt and affirms that he remains a person of interest in an ongoing criminal investigation.

In response to his disappearance, law enforcement agencies have launched an extensive manhunt across the country. Security forces are coordinating efforts nationwide to track his movements, with checkpoints and intelligence units alerted to intercept him if he attempts to travel internally or abroad. Investigators have not ruled out the possibility that he crossed international borders, and cooperation with foreign authorities is being sought to determine his exact whereabouts.

If apprehended, Titus faces extremely harsh penalties under current Cameroonian law. Prosecutors have publicly noted that under the 2014 anti-terrorism legislation, charges tied to rebellion, undermining national unity, and related crimes carry the possibility of a life sentence, and in certain cases, the death penalty. These laws, enacted to strengthen the state response to violent and separatist conflicts, have been applied in previous ing separatist movements have faced life imprisonment without parole, and several individuals remain on death penalty rolls, even as appeals and legal challenges proceed. In many instances, detainees convicted under anti-terrorism and national security statutes have seen little opportunity for sentence reduction or early release.

Despite the severity of the allegations and the nationwide search, Titus's family has publicly denied all charges against him. They describe him as a peaceful activist and insist that he never intended to harm the fabric of the nation. Family representatives have repeatedly stated that the accusations are politically motivated and lack evidence, asserting that he has been mischaracterised by authorities.

Meanwhile, relatives of Titus continue to face intense scrutiny and pressure from security forces. Reports from family members detail repeated raids on their home, physical confrontations with gendarmes and police, and ongoing psychological stress inflicted by repeated interrogations and forced questioning. The family's account paints a picture of sustained targeting by state forces, even in Titus's absence. It is alleged that his mother passed away in Limbe while running from the onslaught of security brutality in Bamenda. His wife and children are in Equatorial Guinea where they seek refuge against physical and psychological attacks from state forces on their inability to provide Titus cases involving similar allegations.

Cameroon's judiciary has a documented history of handing down long prison terms and death penalty sentences in cases regarded as threats to national security. Activists, armed group members, and those accused of support-
